The aspects of the business represented by Business Architecture [1] in the business sector, architecture is a business discipline [necessary quote], which "represents holistic, multidimensional business views of: Capacity, Enda toa end delivers value, the Information, and organizational structure; and relations between these business points of view and strategies, products, policies, initiatives and interested parties "[2] [3] Application in, business architecture is a bridge Among a business model of business and business strategy on the one hand, and the business functionality of the company on the opposite side. Often [quantifying] allows the strategy for the execution methodology. People who develop and maintain business architecture are known as business architects. Overview The term "business architecture" is often used to indicate an architectural description of a company or a business branch, an architectural model, or the profession itself. The business architecture group of the Object Management Group (OMG) (2010) describes it as "a business model that provides a common understanding of the organization and is used for align strategic objectives and tactical needs." [4] According to OMG, a project of this type describes "the structure of the company in terms of governance structure, business processes, and business information." [5] As such, the profession of business architecture focuses mainly on motivational, operational, and analysis frameworks linking these aspects of the company together. [4] The fundamental characteristic of business architecture is that it represents aspects of the real world of a business, together with the way they interact. It is developed by an interdisciplinary practical surface focused on the definition and concerns of concerns what the companies do so, as it does, as it is organized, and how the value is realized. [6] It is used for the design of competitive structures and processes, existing strength leverage, identify potential investment opportunities than in advance the objectives of the business and lead innovation. [7] The products of this business architecture efforts are used to develop plans, make decisions and guide their implementations. [6] In practice, the business effort is conducted alone or as part of a business architecture. [6] While a business architecture study, in the past he was mainly concentrated on the technological aspects of change, the practice is rapidly evolving to use a rigorous business architecture approach to deal with the organizational and motivational aspects of change as well. [7] Alignment between business architecture and business architecture is a natural architectural alignment of two related disciplines. Business architecture represents a business, in the absence of any IT architecture and business architecture provides a general picture for business and IT architecture. [8] History of company architecture Main article: History of corporate architecture The history of business architecture has its origins in 1980. In the coming decades the business architecture has developed in a discipline of "Cross-organization design of the business as a whole "[9] closely linked to corporate architecture. The concept of business architecture has been proposed as a business model, [10] [11] as a business strategy, [12] and also as the representation of tickets. [13] The concept of business architecture has evolved over the years. It was introduced in 1980 as domains And as a business design activity. In the 2000s the study and concept of development of accelerated business architecture. By the end of 2000 the first business architecture manuals were published, separate paintings for the business architecture were came Separate views and models for business architecture have been further under construction, the company architect as a profession has evolved and a growing number of corporate architecture added to their agenda. By 2015 the business architecture has evolved into a common practice. The body of knowledge of corporate architecture was developed and is updated several times a year, and the interest of the academic world and top management is growing. [Necessary quote] Business architecture topics Different views of an organization to develop an integrated view of a company, many different opinions of an organization are generally developed. Every "view" is generally a diagram that illustrates a way to understand the company highlighting specific information about it. The key sorts of the company that can be provided by Business Architecture address different aspects of the company; They are summarized by the Management Object Group (2012) group [5] as follows: The view of the corporate strategy captures the tactical and strategic objectives that guide a forward organization ... the visualization of business features describes the primary business functions of a ' Enterprise and parts of the organization performing these functions ... The view of the value flow defines the end-to-end activity set that provide value to external and internal stakeholders ... The view of business knowledge establishes shared semantics (for example, the customer, the order, and supplier) within an organization and relationships between those semantiche (for example, the name of the customer, the date of the order, the name of the supplier) ... the Organizational view Captures relationships between roles, capacity and business units, the decomposition of these corporate units in subunit and the internal or external management of these units. [5] In addition to the above views of the company, the relationships that connect the aforementioned views form the basis of implementing company architecture.
