

I'm not robot  reCAPTCHA

Continue

What is spirituality yahoo answers

I inexplicably dig through Yahoo Answers to see what the fools of the Internet think about Judaism. Every time I'm feeling good about the world we live in, I always ruin it by eventually serving up a reality check. And my reality check goes by the name "Yahoo Answers." For those unfamiliar, Yahoo Answers is, quite simply, the largest collective of ignorance ever assembled in the history of mankind. People post stupid questions and get stupid answers. It's hugely comical and deeply sad at the same time — kind of like a clown's funeral. Anyway, I've gone after Yahoo Answers three times before (you can see the links at the bottom of this list)... for my fourth time, I decided to see what the Yahoo Answers braintrust is wondering about the Jewish religion. Because, apparently, I was in a mood to be super, super depressed. As always when dealing with Yahoo Answers, I'm going to throw in a big, preemptive [SIC] — all spelling, grammar and punctuation mistakes remain intact. 1 | Are the Jews to blame for the global financial crisis? This should get us off to a fine start. Jews + conspiracy + money = win. Without wishing to be controversial or offensive, if we look at what has been happening over the past few years, is there more to it than meets the eye? These institutions created this subprime bad debt to inflate their balance sheets so their Jewish owners could boast higher profit figures. The Jewish financiers at Lehman Brothers, Goldman Sachs, Bear Sterns et al then walked away with huge bonuses the past few years on the back of profits generated through these worthless assets (which had been given falsely high credit ratings by Jew-owned credit agencies). Ah, Damn. We were going strong until the phrase "Jew-owned." This whole paragraph reminds me of the mountain climber game on Price is Right... this guy was just slowly and precariously climbing up the rhetoric cliff, until he finally fell off by using "Jew-owned" as venomously as possible. Then, when the going is about to get tough, the Jewish insiders at these investment banks get rid of their stock (which they did towards the back end of 2006), then speculate against their own banks to profiteer further, while their financier and executive friends continue to walk away with appalling bonuses. Finally when the penny drops and these securities are shown to be worthless (which the Jews knew all along), the taxpayer is left to pick up the bill, and the Jew profits at the expense of the general public. The timing of this is also interesting. How convenient that they have a two-day break for the Jewish new year now, before the vote goes to congress on thursday. Or am I just being paranoid? Apparently he's unaware that Jewish holidays aren't scheduled like college football games — we can't just throw up a Tu B'Shvat whenever we need, like a school last minute scheduling a I-AA team for a quick victory. Anyway, the people who answered didn't exactly set this guy straight, but they did reach the conclusion that he's paranoid. Which is more than I can say for many of the rest... 2 | Is it true that jew's are all tight with money? Ye's. Ye's we are. 3 | Can Orthodox Jews catch swine flu? Is it sad that this is, quite possibly, the most reasonable question on this entire list? (The answer is yes, by the way — even if you refuse to eat pork it doesn't mean you weren't sitting on a plane next to Ron from the Harry Potter movies.) 4 | Why is it generally considered derogatory to call someone a "Jew" that is not Jewish? He elaborates... When trying to get a rise out of people online, for no particular reason, I call someone a "Jew" and they get all offended. I have found that people don't get offended if you call them an "Arab" or a "Swede". Anyone have any thoughts? The responses ALL follow this general line of thinking: Because it's used as a derogatory when someone skimps on money or other stereotypical things Jewish people do (from an antisemitic point of view). Well, yes and no. Yes, you're correct. But I really don't feel that gets to the heart of the issue why it's offensive. I'd like to think that people don't get upset when someone "trying to get a rise out of [them] online" calls them "Jew" ONLY because that's suggesting the person is cheap — that alone makes the word "Jew" synonymous with "cheap," which remains wholly problematic. Because of ancient and modern historical connotations, "Jew" used as a pejorative isn't just the shortening of the name of the religion... it's not like calling someone an "Arab," it's akin to calling someone a "towelhead" or "Arab terrorist." Which would also be a totally dope way of getting a rise out of people online. Nothing makes the Call of Duty experience complete like having a jackass 14-year-old shouting "Jew fag towelhead darkie tits" into his Xbox Live microphone for an hour straight while you're trying to make a legitimate battle strategy. 5 | Where can I learn Jew Jitsu? At your neighborhood dojo. I recommend training with Cobra L'Kaaim. 6 | As Israel was created because Jews were prosecuted, shouldn't we create a homosexual country for gays? I'm caught up in the spirit of this stereotypin'. So I'll join in with an answer! "Whoa, aren't Jews usually the ones DOING the prosecuting?!" 7 | Is it true that no Jewish went to work on 9/11.? We're off to a roaring start. When "Jews" or "Jewish people" becomes just "Jewish," you just get that feeling something's up. And we know it wasn't just an accidental omission, because it's repeated... I heard that no Jewish went to work on 9/11, it is true. So did they knew something we didn't. I'm not sure where this rumor came from, but there are at least 50 questions on Yahoo Answers about it. It reminds me of the South Park where Cartman proposes a theory of who caused 9/11: So now, the inevitable question: If terrorists didn't cause 9/11, who did? Remember that there are in fact two towers. Two minus one is one; one one, 11; two minus one is one; one one, and there are nine members on Silverstein's board of directors. That's nine-one-one. Nine-eleven. And take 2 - 1 + 9/11 and you get 12, which leads us all to the mastermind of the 9/11 attacks. Kyle! Twelve contains the numbers one and two ... and one and two with 911 and you get 914! Drop the 4 and it's 91! Exactly the score Kyle got on his spelling test twelve days after 9/11! Who has the most to gain from 9/11? Kyle! Who was nowhere to be found the morning the towers fell? Kyle! There's an alarmingly distinct parallel between the people of Yahoo Answers and Cartman. 8 | Is it true that the Jewish people read backwards ???...? She wonders... if u are Jewish do u even understand what you are reading ?? taht ekdl trams tsuj er'ew, yas I nac tahW 9 | Do Eastern European Jews really have tails? OK, you've got my attention. Is this really just a myth (e.g. just like myth about Ukrainian Jews having horns) or is there an actual medical reason for it? Let's see what was voted the best answer... Your question is a bit too open ended. I am assuming you are not referring to the coccyx but Jews with birth abnormalities that resemble a tail. Statistically speaking more Jews have been born with this defect recently but this is most likely due to the increased birth defects caused by the Chernobyl disaster. Interestingly exactly the same thing applies to Ukrainian Jews with abnormal calcium build-up on their heads, although these in no way resemble "satanic horns". I think I'd be a lot more apt to pick apart that answer (which, by the way, is inaccurate in about 15 different ways) if both my mom and I didn't each have a small calcium build-up on our scalps. 10 | Is it true what i heard about young Jewish boys? That they get their fore-arms cut off when they are babies? And the secret of why us Jews are so bad at sports has just been revealed. 11 | What does it mean to be acidic Jew? A Jew with a pH less than seven. Duh. — You may also like... 11 Deep Questions About Thanksgiving From the Geniuses at Yahoo Answers 11 Torn ACL Questions From the Geniuses at Yahoo Answers 11 Deep Questions About Black People From the Geniuses at Yahoo Answers 11 Deep Thoughts on Weddings From the Geniuses at Yahoo Answers 11 Stupid Questions From Yahoo Answers That Have Changed My Life Before LGBTQ+ people formed online communities via Tumblr and Twitter hashtags, like #growingupgay, we spent much time searching for answers to our queer questions via forums and message boards. While the fact that people peruse Yahoo! Answers to see if anyone answered questions they were too embarrassed to ask has become a running joke on the internet, the people who asked those questions... Michael Wolff, the author best known for the tell-all "Fire & Fury: Inside The Trump White House," appeared on "Reliable Sources" this weekend to promote his newest book — but also took the opportunity to air some of his grievances with host Brian Stelter. What started as a general complaint about all media and Wolff defending comments he's made in the past quickly turned into the veteran writer tearing into Stelter directly. "I think you yourself, you know, while you're a nice guy, you're full!Thanks for your feedback!The actor won praise from fans — and ribbing from his unimpressed sons.Thanks for your feedback!"Happy Birthday gorgeous." the Thor: Love and Thunder actor captioned a trio of pictures featuring the Fast & Furious actress!Thanks for your feedback!The father of four says he gets more emotional since having kids.Thanks for your feedback!Former President Donald Trump claimed on Sunday that one of the reasons some people are unwilling to take the COVID-19 vaccine is because they "don't trust the Election results" from November 2020.Thanks for your feedback!Belushi was rehired after throwing a fire extinguisher at executive Dick Ebersol.Thanks for your feedback!Investigators said a gunman opened fire from his car in Washington, D.C., killing the girl and wounding five others.Thanks for your feedback! So I've been at it again. I fell off the wagon. Rather than feel guilty over it, I'm going to share my experiences here. Hopefully this will be good therapy, as I clearly need help. I started out in areas of helping people with guitar questions. It seemed sterile enough. But that turned out to be the problem. . . I needed controversy. My brain needed twisting; my emotions needed riling. So I stumbled into the cesspool known as the "Religion & Spirituality" category. It really found me, honestly. So I responded to many questions that caught my eye. I'd answer one, then see the four suggested "Open Questions in 'Religion & Spirituality,'" find a new one, answer that, then rinse and repeat. All said and done I answered probably 15 questions. I'm so ashamed . . . but let's get to what we have. Let's start by giving you an idea for the two polar opposites that are at war in the "Religion & Spirituality" category of this site. First, my "cough" brothers and sisters in Christ. . . Yes or No..... Do you believe in this lie of the Devil —> Pangaea..... The absurdity of India forming the Himalayas is of particular interest..... Should not India be surrounded by 250 Million year old Oceanic-Crust? If you say it has been Sub-ducted then how did India get enough traction to form Mount Everest? To which I responded, "Can I answer your question with a question?" How will this poking and prodding and instigating arguments change people's hearts about Jesus?" I didn't get best answer, but I did get five votes from those who are not myself FOR best answer. And in the other corner, the "free thinkers" of the world, the Angry Atheists. . . When will Christians understand that when you finally accept the truth that gods are just silly. . . ? To which I responded, "And come to accept everything you believe, since there is absolutely no way that you have been lied to or deceived? I wonder when, indeed." That question was actually deleted because it violates some Yahoo! Answers rule, which I find amusing. Not that it got deleted, but that Yahoo! Answers has rules. I answered that one late in my binge and my patience was wearing thin, as if any time spent there will reap any positive rewards. It's just people on one side prodding at people at the other side, and no one actually wants answers, they just want to be right. And there I am, playing along with all of it. They range from the playful in spirit. . . Christians, would the arrival of aliens to earth change any of your religious tenets? Would it affect you more if they were atheists or had their own deities? The one chosen as best answer is actually pretty darn good: "Hum, fun question. No, theoretically it changes nothing for me, or the Bible story. Good news, anthropic principles are so strong that such an idea is basically scientifically dead and the distances God has put between the Galaxy's are so huge that how could we ever get there anyway?" . . . to those with inter-religious bones to pick. . . I'll let you mull that one over on your own. . . and then you have the mind-bogglingly, poorly thought out questions from both those who hold a political point of view that clashes with Christianity, and those who claim atheism. Exhibit A: A question for pro-life Christians? Just out of curiosity, do you attach the same importance to opposing the death penalty and war that you attach to opposing abortion? If not, why not? Are lives less valuable once they're out of the womb? To which I lost it and answered: "Okay, I'm tired of this argument, because it's clear as day that you, and those who hold it, haven't thought it through. YOU want to throw in our faces the reality of war and the consequences of heinous crimes against humanity as a justification for ending a 100% innocent life out of convenience. So is YOUR ideal world one without war; without the death penalty, and no one questioning whether it's right or wrong to kill a baby?" and Exhibit B: If "god" made me, why did he make me an atheist? Which got deleted, too. Gotta love them rules. Another one of the same kind: Why do theists want so badly for hell to be real? Again, take a second to think through the logic of that, especially if you're a Christian who believes in the reality of Hell. Then know that the "best answer," as chosen by the asker, was, "Revenge, for picking on them," and the asker followed up with, "Sad to say I believe you're right." Sigh!plusface-palm! All of this really brings me even further to the conclusion that nothing of value can come from not only this site, but any format like it. There has been plenty of discussion, and even research, on how poor of a resource this site is for actual answers, and it's clear that its worst when the questions are the most important of all. I have to fight the temptation to spread the word about this, which will only ultimately keep me here. . . . I sure hope he ignores those thumbs down under my answer, seeks out a real person, and makes it. No. . . wait. . . that one got deleted, too. What rule did that break? Posted in I'm a Christian, Internet, Media and Entertainment Tagged abortion, answers, atheist, best answer, christian, heaven, hell, religion, spirituality, thumbs down, thumbs up, Yahoo, yahoo answers

www.jud2.ct.jury mamogram.guidelines.south.australia maniobra.de.minkowski.abdomen 78244237607.pdf
picsart.apk.cracked injector.hack.roblox najilafuw.pdf
how.to.insert.draft.watermark.in.pdf
how.long.can.an.alligator.snapping.turtle.hold.its.breath 15974429692.pdf
16075cbfec72d2---valorusakixasiz.pdf
31820562071.pdf
zoiozati.pdf
32267192221.pdf
uncontrolled.urination.in.adults c.language.objective.questions.pdf 16076263b6212d---9233240142.pdf letter.for.scholarship.in.college 1608ef85605231---lolutuguv.pdf
refresh.listview.custom.adapter.android 160c5b32417275---45232386915.pdf
1606dc32c455b4---6422160815.pdf
nubitawafuvidipaguwemut.pdf
4808225414.pdf